

He wanted to die. She made him want to live.

Fallen angel Elias Kokabel has spent centuries punishing himself for his greatest sin — fathering a forbidden Nephilim son. Now, with his son gone and his divine purpose shattered, Elias retreats to the English countryside seeking peace or death, whichever comes first. But when an alluring mage collapses bleeding and bare on his doorstep, everything changes.

Escape was only the beginning of her fight for freedom.

For a year, Gladys has been held captive by a powerful warlock obsessed with the blood moon prophecy. He's been siphoning magic from other mages and warlocks, funneling it into her, determined to make her powerful enough to bear his prophesied child. But Gladys has been secretly subverting his plans, ensuring she can never give him what he wants. When she finally escapes his clutches, she finds refuge with a brooding fallen angel who makes her feel things she never thought possible. But the warlock will stop at nothing to reclaim his prize, and the blood moon is rising.

Together, they'll break every curse or die trying.

As the warlock closes in with an army of shifters, Elias and Gladys must fight not just for their lives but for their future together. With powers colliding and ancient curses unraveling, they discover that love might be the most powerful magic of all. But when the final confrontation comes, will their connection be strong enough to overcome a warlock's twisted obsession and centuries of divine punishment? In a battle where losing means death for one and eternal torment for the other, Elias and Gladys must become each other's salvation or be destroyed by the very threat that brought them together.
